

Contents

Authors	viii
Foreword by John Koster	ix
The Native Tradition in Transition: English Harpsichords circa 1680 – 1725	1
by Darryl Martin
Earlier English Instruments	3
The Georgian Instruments	9
Bentside Spinets of the Transitional Period	15
Transitional Harpsichords: an Overview	18
Harpsichord by Charles Haward, 1683	24
The “Talbot Manuscript Harpsichord,” attributed to John Player, London, c. 1685	47
Harpsichord by Joseph Tisseran, 1700	57
Harpsichord by Thomas Barton, 1709	67
Harpsichord by Thomas Hancock, 1720	81
Harpsichord by Benjamin Slade, c. 1725	86
Harpsichord by William Smith, c. 1725	93
In Conclusion	98
Appendix: Terminology and Conventions	102
Acknowledgements	104
Bibliography	105
The Stringed Keyboard Instruments of Ferdinand Weber	109
by Jenny Nex and Lance Whitehead
Biography	109
Stringed Keyboard Instruments	113
Harpsichords	116
Upright harpsichord	126
Spinets	131
Square Piano	136
Ferdinand Weber and Music	137
Appendix: Rachel Weber’s Will	141
Acknowledgements	143

Criteria for the Determination of Original Stringing in Historical Keyboard Instruments: The Cautionary Tale of a 1785 Longman and Broderip Harpsichord by Grant O'Brien	145
The Accademia Single-Manual Harpsichord by Longman and Broderip, London, 1785	147
Seven Criteria for Deciding If the Strings on an Historical Keyboard Instrument Are Original	148
The 1785 Longman and Broderip Harpsichord Strings Examined in the Light of Each of the Above Criteria	160
Original Stringing on Continental Harpsichords	173
More About the German and English Wire-Gauge Systems	179
Why Is It Important to Leave Original Strings in situ ?	183
Conclusions	186
Appendix 1: A Short Complementary Analysis of Another Single-Manual Harpsichord by Longman and Broderip, London, 1785	191
Appendix 2: Recommendations for the Care, Handling, and Storage of Removed Original Strings	196
Appendix 3: Complete Measurements of the Long 8' and the 4' String Lengths of the Accademia Longman and Broderip Single-Manual Harpsichord, London, 1785	204
Appendix 4: Select Bibliography	205
Acknowledgements	212